- Q3) a) Read the following passage carefully & answer the questions given below. [10]

“Critical thinking” is not synonymous with “good thinking,” “hard thinking,” “clear thinking,” “constructing arguments,” “problem solving,” or “thinking outside the box.” Critical thinking kicks in after you have done these and other kinds of thinking. It’s what you do when you think about thinking, specifically, when you evaluate the thinking you or someone else uses in arriving at a conclusion about something.

Unfortunately, critical thinking won't necessarily tell you whether you should get a dog or who to support for President, or whether there is global warming or why your car won't start. It can, however, help you spot a bad reason for getting a dog or voting for someone, or for thinking there is or isn't global warming or for this or that explanation of why your car won't start. Please notice we say it can do that, not that it will. In the end, reasoning may yield to self-interest, wishful thinking, desire for acceptance, or other temptations; and we may find it difficult to free our thinking from various cognitive biases, distortions, or blind spots. Just remember, reasoning that doesn't measure up to the standards set forth in this book is not worthy of acceptance. Reading the book thoughtfully, doing the exercises, and applying what you learn will be a good first step toward avoiding these problems.

To get good at tennis, golf, playing a musical instrument, or most other skills, you have to practice, and practice some more. It's the same way with critical thinking, and that's why we provide so many exercises. For some exercises, there is no such thing as only one correct answer, just as there is no such thing as only one correct way to serve a tennis ball. Some answers, however—just like tennis serves—are better than others and that is where your instructor comes in. In many exercises, answers you give that are different from your instructor's are not necessarily incorrect. Still, your instructor's answers will be well thought out, reliable, and worth your attention. We recommend taking advantage of his or her experience to improve your ability to think critically.

Questions:

- i) How is critical thinking different?
  - ii) How can critical thinking help us?
  - iii) What is critical thinking compared with?
  - iv) Give a suitable title to the passage?
- b) Read the following passage carefully and make notes on it. [10]

Vagueness plays a very important role in much that we do. In the law, for example, how we deal with vagueness is crucial. Whether the word "torture" applies to various types of interrogation techniques, especially including "waterboarding," for example, has been a serious issue for several years. Many former officials have claimed that these techniques did not count as torture, but many others have disagreed. (Some, who subjected themselves to the procedure, have disagreed rather violently.) Possibly more relevant to us and to you personally, whether a bit of driving is "reckless" or not may determine whether you pay a small fine or a large one—or even go to jail. Consider, too, the speed limits we are asked to observe on the highways. Ideally, the offense in question would be something like "driving too fast for the circumstances" rather than driving faster than a particular speed. This is because what is safe at 80 miles per hour in one set of circumstances (midday, no traffic, clear weather, and dry roads) might be dangerously unsafe at 40 miles per hour in another (dark, heavy traffic, rain or fog, slick roads). But we have opted for set speed limits because “driving too fast” is a vague term, and we do not want to put our fate in the hands of patrol officers and judges who are in a position to make arbitrary decisions about whether it applies in our case. So, because we are afraid of the consequences of the vague concept, we sometimes get away with driving dangerously fast under bad circumstances and we are sometimes ticketed for driving over the posted limit when it is quite safe to do so.

Sometimes vagueness is just annoying. Suppose that it’s late and you’re looking for someone’s house and you’re given the following directions: “Go on down this street a ways ‘til you get to the first major intersection, make a sharp right, then, when the street starts to curve to the left, you’ll be there.” The vagueness in these directions is as likely to get your blood pressure up as it is to help you find your destination. (How do you decide that a particular intersection is “major,” for example?) Vagueness is often intentional, used as a means to avoid giving a clear, precise answer. Politicians often resort to vague statements if they don’t want their audience to know exactly where they stand. A vague answer to the question “Do you love me?” may mean there’s trouble ahead in the relationship.

Vagueness occurs to varying degrees, and it is difficult to the point of impossibility to get rid of it entirely. Fortunately, there is no need to get rid of it entirely. We live very comfortably with a certain amount of vagueness in most of what we say. “Butte City is a very small town” presents us with no problems under ordinary circumstances, despite the vagueness of “very small town.” “Darren has no school loans because his parents are rich” doesn’t tell us how much money the parents have, but it tells us enough to be useful. “Rich” and “small,” like “bald,” are vague concepts; there is no accepted clear line between the things to which they apply and those to which they don’t. Nonetheless, they are valuable notions; we get a lot of good use out of them.

Write a letter to an NGO stating that you want to help it in some way.

Q5) a) Write a précis of the following passage.

There are different kinds of thinking and other approaches to some of the mental challenges we face. Let's start with convergent and divergent thinking. Convergent thinking is our normal state. When we hear a suggestion, our instincts are to examine it, criticize it and analyse its consequences with particular emphasis on what might be wrong with it. We are trained at school and university to summarize, scrutinize and evaluate the works of authors, historians and scientists. It is easy and natural for us to focus in on a notion and examine it critically from various view points. We bring our own assumptions and mindset to bear and put the new idea into the framework of the world as we see it.

Divergent thinking, on the other hand, involves moving away from the core subject in a spread of directions. When we use divergent thinking we can generate all sorts of ideas that are not obviously connected with the original challenge or concept. We stretch the boundaries and let our imagination generate many different possibilities — including wild or unsound ideas. It is the counterpoint to convergent thinking, where we focus sharply on one target and narrow down our options to arrive at a chosen solution.

Convergent thinking allows us to use our knowledge to examine concepts and see where they fit. Unfortunately our natural tendency is to reject ideas if they are not aligned with our existing knowledge and belief systems. Divergent thinking involves considering all sorts of points of view-including the unconventional, the unfashionable, the ridiculous and the outlandish. It is an essential skill, which goes unpractised for many. There are times when we need the precision of convergent thinking and there are times when it is overly restrictive. The two main phases of a brainstorm meeting are good examples of how both methods can be employed in harmony.

OR

Translate the following passage into Marathi/Hindi.

[10]

Today we are living in an age of science. Human life has become dynamic as per the scientific progress. While reaching at the zenith of success and progress man is finding days, months, years and even his whole life very short day by day.

In the motion of this temptation every-one lost his health. The traditional tools of motion are inadequate to him. He feels need of more speedy appliances than the speed of his thoughts. The world has came too close because of the progress of information and technology. Every one's passion has increased to control over the whole world and information. This has created fierce competition in human life. This competition has burdened an unknown stress on human mind. Man has lost his natural life and living because of this stress. Surrounding stress and adverse physical and psychological effects has affected his daily life.

- b) Summarise the following passage. [10]

Philosophers usually think of their discipline as one which discusses perennial, eternal problems-problems which arise as soon as one reflects. Some of these concern the difference between human beings and other beings, and are crystallized in questions concerning the relation between the mind and the body. Other problems concern the legitimation of claims to know, and are crystallized in questions concerning the "foundations" of knowledge. To discover these foundations is to discover something about the mind, and conversely.

Philosophy as a discipline thus sees itself as the attempt to underwrite or debunk claims to knowledge made by science, morality, art, or religion. It purports to do this on the basis of its special understanding of the nature of knowledge and of mind. Philosophy can be foundational in respect to the rest of culture because culture is the assemblage of claims to knowledge, and philosophy adjudicates such claims. It can do so because it understands the foundations of knowledge, and it finds these foundations in a study of man-as-knower, of the "mental processes" or the "activity of representation" which make knowledge possible.

To know is to represent accurately what is outside the mind; so to understand the possibility and nature of knowledge is to understand the way in which the mind is able to construct such representations. Philosophy's central concern is to be a general theory of representation, a theory which will divide culture up into the areas which represent reality well, those which represent it less well, and those which do not represent it at all(despite their pretense of doing so).

- c) Summarise the following [10]

The first step must be to specify the subject matter. However, this turns out to be more complex than it appears at first sight. ‘Morality’ concerns the distinction between good and evil, and ‘morals’ are usually taken to refer to rules about what people ought to do and what they ought not to do. But, when we talk about ‘moral’ values or behaviour, we usually mean values that we see as ‘good’, or as how someone ‘ought’ to behave. Although — as we shall see — the mechanisms by which people come to hold moral values (in the sense of values seen as good) and behave in moral ways are similar in many respects to those by which immoral (in the sense of bad) values and behaviour are acquired, our main interest is with the former. Beyond that, morality comes within the province of several academic disciplines, and there seems to be little general agreement on its scope — or, indeed, on the terms used to discuss it. For most people, conventions and rights, morals and ethics are categories with no precise boundaries, and are used rather loosely in everyday speech. Dictionaries make no clear distinction between morals and ethics. In general, morals are concerned specifically with how other human beings should be treated, while ethics is often used more broadly to include such issues as intellectual integrity. Some, however, use ethics to refer to a local group's set of values, and consider morality to concern issues applicable across groups. As indicated below, some authors do and others do not distinguish morals from conventions. While most probably, all agree that morality is primarily concerned with pro-social behaviour, cooperation and justice, a number of matters that some consider to involve morality are neglected by others. It would be tedious to attempt to survey these differences in opinion, but it is necessary to situate the approach taken here by brief references to salient aspects of some of them.

Q4) a) Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions below. [15]

It doesn't seem appropriate to advance an account of the origins of morality without defining the construct, but this is a daunting undertaking. To my knowledge no one has yet succeeded in accomplishing it in a manner that has stood up to critical reviews. Viewed psychologically, morality is a concept that people harbor in their heads. To understand what it means to them, we need to induce them to explicate it. The most obvious way of accomplishing this is to ask people to describe the phenomena they consider moral, then figure out what they have in common. The behaviors and traits that people consider moral tend to fit in five main categories — respect for authority, self-control, altruism, fairness, and honesty. However, people tend to conceptualize these pro-social forms of conduct in different ways, have different ideas about what makes them moral, and have difficulty explaining what they have in common.

Lawrence Kohlberg and other cognitive-developmental psychologists have employed another method of inducing people to explicate their implicit conceptions, or theories, of morality. They have asked people to decide how characters in imaginary scenarios should resolve hypothetical moral dilemmas and to justify the choices they make. After classifying the moral judgments people made to these dilemmas, Kohlberg and his colleagues concluded that people's conceptions of morality are organized in one of six systems of ideas, or implicit theories, which Kohlberg has called structures of moral reasoning. Cognitive-developmental psychologists have found that people's conceptions of morality improve as people get older, undergoing up to five qualitative changes that define stages of moral development. However, when my colleagues and I evaluated Kohlberg's model of morality, we found that people often invoke different conceptions of morality in their everyday lives from those they invoke in response to the hypothetical moral dilemmas used by Kohlberg and his colleagues. A third approach to defining morality involves identifying the functions that people use conceptions of morality to achieve. In this approach, conceptions of morality are treated as instruments that people use to solve personal and interpersonal problems. For example, people use moral judgments to induce one another to conform to the moral norms of their cultures obeying the rules that uphold the social orders of their groups, resisting temptation, being honest and fair, helping others in need, and so on.

Q4) a) Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions given below. [10]

The constitutional guarantee of speedy trial is an important safeguard to prevent undue and oppressive incarceration prior to trial; to minimize concern accompanying public accusation and to limit the possibilities that long delays will impair the ability of an accused to defend himself.

The right to a speedy trial is first mentioned in that landmark document of English law, the Magna Carta. The constitutional philosophy propounded as right to speedy trial has though grown in age by almost two and a half decades, the goal sought to be achieved is yet a far-off peak. It is a concept which deals with speedy disposal of cases to make the judiciary more effective and to impart justice as fast as possible. Article 21 declares that “no person shall be deprived of his life or personal liberty except according to the procedure laid by law.” Justice Krishna Iyer while dealing with the bail petition in Babu Singh v. State of UP, remarked. Our justice system even in grave cases, suffers from slow motion syndrome which is lethal to ‘fair trial’ whatever the ultimate decision. Speedy justice is a component of social justice since the community, as a whole, is concerned in the criminal being condignly and finally punished within a reasonable time and the innocent being absolved from the inordinate ordeal of criminal proceedings. In Sheela Barse v. Union of India the court reaffirmed that speedy trial is to be a fundamental right. Right to speedy trial is a concept gaining recognition and importance day by day.

Legislature is an authority which makes the law & executive takes into consideration effective implementation of the legislations while judiciary implements it in practical life. The question is whether anyone is really serious and concerned about these problems. With the rapid growth in technological, industrial field and population, workload has increased on the judiciary system which calls for effective and rapid disposal of ever increasing cases but the effectiveness of the court is hampered badly.

Questions:

- i) What is a constitutional guarantee in the passage?
  - ii) What did Krishna Iyer say dealing with the bail petition?
  - iii) How do legislature, executive and judiciary differ from each other?
  - iv) Why is the court hampered?
- b) Read the following passage carefully and make notes on it. [10]

The Indian government has laid down laws in the Constitution like the Suppression of Immoral Traffic in Women and Girls Act, 1956, The Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act, and many others. In September 2006, the Indian government responded to the trafficking issue by creating a central anti-trafficking law enforcement “nodal cell,” The nodal cell is a federal two-person department responsible for collecting and performing analysis of data related to trafficking, identifying the causes of the problem. monitoring action taken by state governments, and holding meetings with state-level law enforcement. In 2007, three state governments established anti-trafficking police units, the first of this kind in the India.

The emerging scenarios are certainly positive but displaying full-page advertisements against child labour, women slaves. etc in national newspapers at periodic intervals is not enough. We have to wake up before it's too late. We can take up community surveillances which will help check ongoing trafficking activities. Establishing women's groups which will help take care of women in the underprivileged societies since women and girls are the most affected victims. We as the youth can take up initiatives to spread awareness programs in villages, local schools. among kids of the poor society and children suffering from parents and poor conditions where help can be provided.

Another initiative which can be taken up is the involvement of the trafficked victims and helping them tell their story so that this kind of inhuman treatment doesn't happen to others. Human trafficking lowers the value of human life: it brutalizes the society and violates our belief in the human capacity for a change. So let's work for a better future for our country and change something that India only talks about. Let's turn it into reality.

Q5) a) Write a précis of the following passage. [10]

Mercy is God's grace, a gift to the mankind which gives all an equal chance to mend ways and to correct a deviant behaviour. This might be why every civilised state has had a provision to pardon offenders in their criminal justice system to be exercised as an act of grace and humanity in proper cases. Without such a power of clemency, to be exercised by some functionary of the government, a country would be most imperfect and deficient in its political morality.

This rationale is further enunciated by Justice Holmes of US Supreme Court where he points out that pardon as of today is not an act of grace but is a constitutional scheme which when granted is determination of the ultimate authority that the public welfare will be served by inflicting less than what the judgement fixed.

The significance and need for clemency has been a source of debate from decades. Montesquieu believed in significance of clemency in the monarchical system. The power of pardon could be thought of as an archaic survivor of a bygone era where there existed an omnipotent ruler who was vested with powers to bestow his benevolence once in a while totally based on his whims and fancies.

Even today the reflections of the past can be seen in the provisions of our constitution. The constitution vests in the president and the governors of various states with the power to grant reprieves and pardons through its Article 72 and 161 respectively in addition to the commutation of sentences which may be also appropriated by the government under the provisions of CrPC and IPC. The presidential power acts as a safety valve in exceptional cases where the legal system fails to deliver a morally or politically unacceptable result and hence secures public welfare.
